- Should Dance Some Mo prevail in the Queen's Plate it would be a bittersweet victory for his Ontario owner and breeder Sam-Son Farm, which announced in October 2020 that it was dispersing its racing and breeding stock before the end of 2022, bringing an end to a 50-year legacy in racing. A win would be the third Plate triumph just in Dance Some Mo's family alone, and the sixth by Sam-Son as an owner. Both Dance Some Mo's third and fourth dams — Dancethruthedawn (2001) and Dance Smartly (1991), respectively — won the Plate and were both later inducted into the Canadian Horse Racing Hall of Fame.

- "It would be bittersweet. I hoped to get him to this race. It was something that was important to me for (Sam-Son)," said trainer Graham Motion. "There's fewer and fewer operations of the calibre (of Sam-Son) with these kind of pedigrees. I feel extremely fortunate to have been part of it the last few years."

- Dance Some Mo is a gelded son of Uncle Mo out of Dancethruthedawn's daughter Dance Again. "He's a big, attractive horse. They had high hopes for him when he came in from the farm. We experimented with the dirt, but, clearly, he was much better when we got him on the grass — and he handles the synthetic well," Motion said.

- On July 16, Dance Some Mo and Patrick Husbands were second in an Allowance Optional Claiming race in the gelding's Woodbine debut. "That was important to me to get him up there and get a race into him and I thought he was a little unlucky that day. Patrick has ridden him now, which is great. So, he has a feel for him," Motion said.

- Motion said he would dearly love to win his first Queen's Plate. "It's a race as a trainer that you love to be part of," he said. "All trainers want to be part of historical races like that ... When you get to train horses from these kind of families, there's always a good chance you could end up in a race like this."
